

Small Liberal Arts College

My father went to a small liberal arts college in Western Pennsylvania and it was his gateway to the life that he wanted.

He earned his bachelor's degree there. It was a school that catered to local people, people from within the state, and I really resonate with that.

With a Thomas education, where I know Thomas has a lot of first-generation students, and a lot of Maine students. I value that.

For me, I was able to pick up with my master's degree where my father's educational career ended. That American legacy story is a big part of what brought me to Thomas and helped me be successful.

I got to carry on from the gift that I got from my parents and was able to bring that further along. and I hope to share that with my children also.
